

CONTENTS

ABOUT THE CONTRIBUTORS 7

CASE STUDIES

Ante Lucic and Daniel Pustelnik: American Relations With Saudi Arabia:
An Assessment of Shifting Policies 11

Ante Lucic: The Funnel Effect: Failure of the United States' Involvement in Lebanon 1982-198465

Ante Lucic: Hezbollah: An Iranian Project?.....77

Ante Lucic: Obama's Potential for the Normalization of the Middle East.....89

About the Contributors

Ante Lucic (b. 1988, Zagreb, Croatia) is a graduate of Jacobs University Bremen, Germany, where he obtained a BA in International Politics and History. Having spent several years in the Middle East, he has become acquainted with the region's political, historical, and security affairs. Besides formal studies, he has chaired a number of civil initiatives in Syria and Germany, and completed two consulting internships in Croatia. He is one of the founders of the Jacobs University's student radio "Pledari Grond," he organized and participated in many student conferences, and is a member of Matica Hrvatska. Ante Lucic is a prospective Master student in the field of Intelligence, Security and Counterterrorism. His areas of research are mostly the Middle Eastern and Balkan politics and security.

Daniel Pustelnik (b. 1984, Berlin, Germany) is a graduate of Jacobs University Bremen, Germany. His main field of interest is strategy, particularly how factor endowments and their interrelation with player behavior can be systematically analyzed. After graduating from Beethoven Gymnasium in Berlin he moved to Freiburg to study medicine. Upon acquiring the Physikum (Germany's pre-clinical cumulative exam certificate) in 2007, he moved to Bremen to study International Politics and History at Jacobs University, from where he graduated in 2010 as a BA. His academic foci lay on political economy in general and the role of energy in particular. His interest in strategy extends across the fields of politics, economics, and business. He has been member of several winning teams in debating and business competitions.